Top Things Iran Is Famous for

ZAGROS MOUNTAINS

The Zagros Mountains are the largest mountain system of Iran in the Middle East, covering about one-third of the country.

The Zagros Mountain, a major mountain range in Central Asia, extends for a distance of 1,500 kilometers in a northwest-to-southeast direction from the border areas between eastern Turkey and northern Iraq across the Iranian Plateau, ending at the Strait of Hormuz in southern Iran. Mount Dena, with a peak achieving an elevation of 14,465 feet, is the highest peak in the Zagros Mountain system.

Limestone and shale rocks from the Mesozoic Era and Paleogene Period form the most commonly seen geological structural materials of the Zagros Mountains. The oldest rocks found here date back to the Precambrian Period.

The predominant plant community in the mountains is a forest or open woodland of deciduous broadleaf trees, with an understory of steppe shrubs and grasses. Oaks, particularly Persian oak (Quercus brantii), are the characteristic trees, covering over 50% of the Zagros mountains in Iran.

Mount Dena

The highest point in the range is Mount Dena, elevation

14,465 feet (4,409 meters), located in the middle of Zagros. Passes through the mountains are used for reaching the fertile intermontane plains, which lie at elevations above 5,000 feet (1,500 meters).

Zagros wildlife

Mammal species roam the rocky slopes of Zagros including the Persian leopard, Syrian brown bear, bezoar ibex, and striped hyena. Lively leaping amongst branches of oaks, beautiful Persian squirrels make their homes in the oldest and tallest trees; skilled swimmers and competent climbers, they boast luxuriant tails of a splendid russet red.

ABYANEH HISTORICAL VILLAGE IN CENTRAL IRAN

Abyaneh, an astonishing village, is located on the northwestern slope of Mount Karkas, 38 kilometers from Natanz, in Isfahan province. It is a tourist attraction famous for its ancient architecture and many historical sites. As a village of great antiquity, Abyaneh is like a living architectural and anthropological museum. It presents an impressive model of the man adapting to the environment.

An impressive aspect of Abyaneh's architecture is that the houses are uniform in appearance. The doors, most of which have two knockers, are wooden and built in traditional styles. There are beautiful patterns, poems, and the names of the owners and masons carved on some doors. The poems demonstrate a good picture of the old Iranian culture.
